HOLOCAUST SURVIVOR SAYS COMPARISONS TO COVID AGENDA COMPLETELY JUSTIFIED

FREEDOM, WISCONSIN, October 5, 2022 — As was the case in World War II, a coordinated effort using physicians, nurses, scientists, and media propaganda, the world today adopted Nazi-style methods to control billions of people, according to Vera Sharav, a Holocaust survivor who was rescued from a concentration camp in Ukraine when she was a young girl. She is a public advocate for human rights, and the founder and president of the Alliance for Human Research Protection (AHRP) which serves as an information resource and public interest watchdog organization whose goal is to unlock the walls of secrecy in biomedical research and bring accountability to that endeavor.

Public health officials influenced medical examiners to falsify death certificates at the behest of the CDC. The new rules stated if a person tested positive for COVID-19 and died, it was classified as a COVID death. The departure from traditional protocols of death determination certainly played a role in the mounting deaths being attributed to the virus rather than the true cause of death. This is the type of control the authoritarians seek, through fear and propaganda, Sharav warns.

“People have been programmed through an education system that teaches people to defer to authority. Deferring to authority and obeying what is dictated by authority, is collaborating in one’s enslavement,” she said.

Reflecting upon history, one can easily see the control measures enacted worldwide in the behavior of the authorities in mid-1930s Nazi Germany.

“The Holocaust didn’t begin in the gas chambers,” Sharav said. “It developed in phases – 9 years of incremental phases during which people lost their rights – their legal rights, their civil rights, and human rights. It happened in stages because Hitler wanted to see if anyone would object. So the problem, really, with a holocaust, is with the onlookers who obey orders blindly and they keep escalating and escalating the human rights violations until you’ve got genocide on your hands,” Sharav explained.

Over the last three months, Sharav has joined forces with Scott Schara, co-founder and president of Our Amazing Grace's Light Shines On, Inc., an organization created in memory of his daughter, Grace, a 19-year-old girl with Down Syndrome who lost her life at the hands of medical personnel at St. Elizabeth’s Hospital (Ascension) in Appleton, Wis., on Oct. 13, 2021, to warn people of the coming atrocities. Despite their stories being than 70 years apart, they share a significant bond in their desire to prevent others from having to undertake what they’ve lived through.

“The story of the Holocaust is such a parallel because Grace was in the first group – along with the elderly – to be taken out,” Schara said. “What’s different this time is they’ve been setting this up for a lot longer. They took the lessons learned from the failures of the Nazis during the Holocaust and corrected them to ensure more people would die. God tells us to be fruitful and multiply, but the world tells us we have too many people and population reduction is urgent. What better way to reduce the population than to use scientists and doctors to make it look altruistic?"

The unethical withholding of beneficial medicines such as hydroxychloroquine, ivermectin and budesonide meant a guaranteed rise in deaths simply from doctors choosing not to do anything for a patient, other than make him go home until he got worse, at which point the hospital could feign justification for ventilator use, ICU-designation and expensive, toxic drugs in remdesivir ($3,000/dose) and tocilizumab ($22,000/dose) that showed harm to patients in clinical trials. All in all, a COVID-designated ICU patient can create upwards of $400,000 for a hospital. And if the patient dies, the hospital, preposterously, gets an additional $13,000 bonus.

"People always seem to focus on money, which is an easy tie into the comparison. They can't comprehend money drives everything and evil drives money," Schara said. "If you look at the fact that 67 percent of kids with Down Syndrome in the United States are already murdered before they're born – that's called the 'banality of evil,' which means evil is so common you don't recognize it. Aborting Down Syndrome children is the standard of care – that's completely evil. The government is paying hospitals bonus money to facilitate an evil agenda. Think about these medical personnel who were taking care of Grace. They never would have even had her, so of course they viewed her as a 'worthless eater.'"

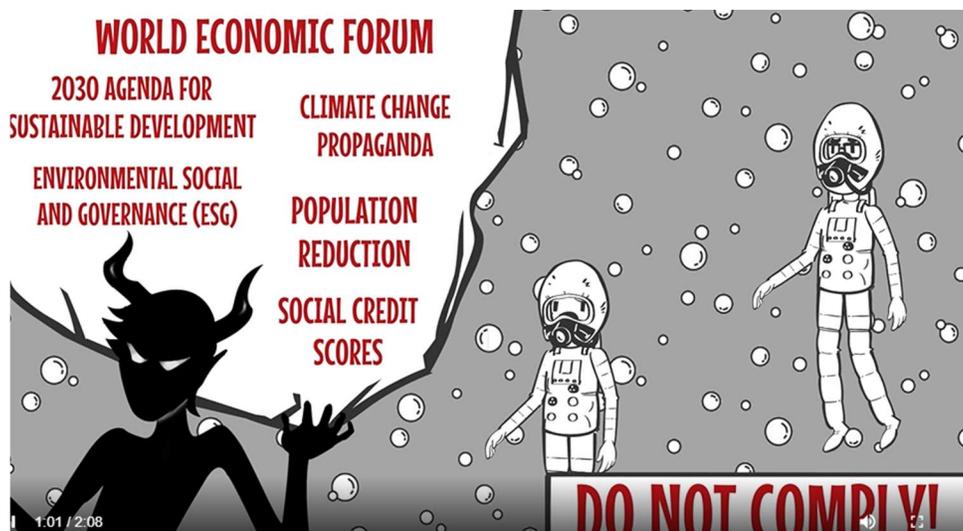

That term was used in Nazi Germany under the T-4 euthanasia program that attempted to eliminate the disabled from society. The belief was the country shouldn't be burdened by those who can't produce, so doctors made the choice to kill off those with special needs and physical disabilities starting with German children under the age of 3, then went onto the older disabled children, to the mentally ill entirely, and then to the nursing homes, said Sharav.

"The disabled are dying in hospitals at an 11-times greater rate than the normal population," said Schara, citing research out of the U.K. he found as he began connecting the dots as to why he believes his daughter was murdered.

"What it's about is eugenics, where people are categorized according to their value to society. Who decides who's valuable and who's not valuable? Once you do that, you open the gates of Hell," Sharav said. "And with COVID, what happened early on, in March and April of 2020, was the governments across western Europe, United States, Canada, Australia and others issued orders to hospitals to not treat the elderly. As a result, the elderly were medically murdered." Grace's story is appropriate in this context to show that history is repeating itself, she said.

Both Sharav and Schara believe the way to end this current genocide is through mass noncompliance and questioning authority, neither of which happened during the Holocaust. "God does not want us to obey Satanic laws and mandates designed to control us. He will provide the strength to resist," Schara said.

Their two organizations collaborated on a short, animated video to get their message out to the world.

They are proud of the work they're doing together because they see it's helping wake people up.

"I've had people tell me they felt like something was wrong throughout COVID, that things just didn't match up. Looking at it through this lens of history is what made them realize their intuition was spot on. We have to keep spreading the word and continue to save lives," Schara said. "The first step to waking up is to realize you've been programmed," Schara added.
